Life Is Beautiful

This movie is about a Jewish man, Guido that falls in love with a non-Jewish woman, Dora. He attempts to get close to her but she is of a high-class society. They soon later fall in love, get married, and have a kid, Giosue. This was all before World War II. Soon the war came upon and this is where it turns around. Guido is a happy kind man who wants to keep his kid happy. He is taken in by the Nazi and scent to a concentration camp with his son. Dora not being a Jew asks the Nazis to let her board the train. Guido explains to the sun that this is a game, whomever gets 1,000 points wins a tank. Guido hides his kid and works in the camp, after the day he tells his kid how many points he has won. Later the Germans are having a party; Guido is a servant and Giosue is with the kids, he is asked not to talk or they will discover him. Then the German army goes into a fight in which Guido takes his chance to escape but tells his son to stay hidden because it's a hide-and-seek game. Guido is then caught by 2 German soldiers and is killed. After the crossfire, Giosue comes out and a tank rolls up. Giosue is rescued and reunited with his mom and tells him that "we won the tank".

I like this movie because it is sad and uprising too. It shows a comedic side of the story but then shows the sad future the Jews suffered. It had a big impact image that I cannot forget. The color scheme was blue, white, and grey. It represents the light side and dark side of the movie.
